There were more suicides in Vermont during 1908 than the year before. "Stop, look and listen."

The Kansas City man who has been insured for $3,000,000 is surely worth his weight in gold—dead weight.

A contemporary refers to the shutting-down of the Washington county granite industry as a "sinister" loss. If the contemporary means "real," we agree.

"A Taxpayer" writes the Burlington Free Press a protest on local conditions and takes twenty-five good Free Press lines to hold a single sentence, ending with (it) "seems nothing short of a miracle." Seems so.

The literary world lost two valuable members in a single day, in the deaths of Richard Watson Gilder, for twenty-eight years editor of the Century Magazine, and William M. Laffan, the aggressive director of the New York Sun. But their places will be filled in time.

Gold has been discovered on Beckley hill in Barre, Vt., but it is too early yet to determine how much the discovery will cost the enthusiastic miners.—Boston Globe.

At any rate, it furnished some splendid physical exercise, as anyone would testify after visiting the hole. And then again—and then again.

President Buckham and President Nichols, banqueting together at Burlington the other evening, made a case of extremes meeting, the one having served thirty-seven years as president of the university of Vermont, and the other just starting out on his first alumni-visiting tour as the new head of Dartmouth college.

ST. JOHNSBURY'S FIRE EQUIPMENT.

Appropriately of the recent fire, in which nine lives were lost, the St. Johnsbury Caledonian refutes the insinuation that there was "criminal negligence" in not providing proper fire department equipment, and makes out a pretty good case. At the same time, the Caledonian urges the citizens of the community not to get into a feeling of self-sufficiency and neglect to add such other equipment as shall be found, after thorough examination, to be necessary. Included in the enumeration are five hose carts (two of which are located in adjoining villages), a hook and ladder truck, one lifeline, 5,000 feet of serviceable hose, two water systems of good pressure, three fire engines and one hundred call men. A General fire alarm system is being installed. We understand that the fire department is a volunteer organization, and, as such, not quite so prompt as a regular department. Perhaps the citizens will remedy this later by adding a permanent department. Having done that and procured a chemical engine for incipient fires, the town will have done about all that could be required of a place of that size.

OUR TUNGSTEN LIGHTS!

The introduction of "tungsten" lights by the local electric lighting companies has caused a considerable change in the service, and the old carbon lights are now found to be very unsatisfactory. The name "tungsten" is not a trade name, as many people suppose, but it is the commonly-used name of the metal which goes into the bulb. Tungsten is one of the rarest metals found in the United States, and although the production of it is not large it goes into a number of uses. According to the United States Geological Survey, the entire production for 1908 was only 671 tons, which was much less than the year before, because of the depression in the steel industry, inasmuch as tungsten is more largely used in the making of tool steel than in any other line. Its particular value in making tool steel is because it imparts the property of holding temper at a much higher temperature than high-carbon steels. As its melting point is very high, tungsten is also very valuable as a filament for electric lamps. It gives off a whitish light, which is much more perfect than the carbon, while its efficiency is said to be twice as great. One might suppose that the greatly increased production of tungsten lights would demand a greater output than 671 tons in a year; but that is not the case, since a single pound of the metal can be made into thousands of these filaments which go into the little glass bulbs. The metal is found in many places of the country, but never in large quantities; so that the difficulties of mining the metal are increased because of the necessity for frequent search for traces and the relocation of machinery as soon as tungsten is found. However, it has a good commercial value to make up for the added cost of mining.

CURRENT COMMENT

B. B. Smalley's Age.

In making a very complimentary summary of the many excellencies in the use of the late Bradley B. Smalley, a Vermont contemporary says he "had been a delegate to a score of national (political) conventions." Inasmuch as these conventions are held once in four years and Mr. Smalley was 74 years old, and seeing, also, that national conventions were not generally held until 70 years ago, the contemporary's generous exaggeration will be easily discernible to the thoughtful.—St. Albans Messenger.

Northfield Slate.

It is perhaps not generally known that Northfield has a slate quarry and cutting plant, fully equipped with modern machinery, which has stood idle the past year for unavoidable reasons. The News has no authority to say when it will be started, but it believes the time is not very far distant when it will be successfully operated on a liberal basis. When this does take place, its success is assured, and an era of slate development, equalled only by the success of Barre granite, will follow. Northfield's hills are full of the best black slate in the world, only awaiting the touch of capital, under efficient direction, to add to the prosperity of central Vermont.—Northfield News.

Maxwell Everts' Energy.

The enlargement of the Windsor machine shop, already spoken of in these columns, promises not to be an assured fact, ground having been broken for a fine new building. The revival and re-establishment of this important enterprise in Windsor is largely due to the energy and determination of Maxwell Everts, who has now associated with him, self C. A. Moore of New York as president and, presumably, as financial backer. To Mr. Everts, the promoter, to Mr. Gridley, the inventor of the wonderful lathe, to Mr. Moore and those connected with the concern, the thanks of Windsor and the applause of the state are plainly due. Another step has been made toward a greater industrial Vermont.—Rutland Herald.

Vermont Capital for Vermont Development.

We have devoted considerable space of late to the subject of the development of Vermont's natural resources and the improvement of the business opportunities opening in different communities. There is one phase of the situation which has not received sufficient attention, and that is the matter of capital for the prosecution of local enterprises.

The history of various financial disasters in different parts of the West and South has demonstrated in the past that not a few people rather send their money away from home, where they can not keep track of it than to loan it right at home. This is probably true of some of the banking institutions in different parts of Vermont.

It goes without saying that credit is a far-reaching and important factor in the development of a community, and when men allow their funds to be gathered together and sent out of the state instead of being loaned, whenever possible, at home in aid of local development, they are in reality working against their own community.

We protest against people who do not patronize home merchants and help to keep up local business enterprises. There is just as much reason why a bank should patronize home industries and business enterprises as why people should patronize local merchants, and depositors as a body have it in their power to insist upon the adoption of this policy in their respective communities.

Vermont capital for Vermont development, whenever possible, should be the watchword of Vermonters.—Burlington Free Press.

A Counsellor of Young Men.

In the delivery of four Dodge lectures at Yale, Governor Hughes is engaged in a congenial service. He is at home before a body of students. When he took leave of the professional relation he did not withdraw his frequently declared liking for it. On the contrary, no other service in which he has recently engaged has quite taken its place in his affections, and he looks back to it with something of the same longing felt by the successful merchant or lawyer for the farm that he left in his boyhood. For this reason he manifests a deeper sense of responsibility than is usual in such lectures. He is trying to do something more than entertain. He is giving earnest counsel vitally with an enthusiasm whose sincerity cannot be doubted.

The standards of citizenship that he is setting forth before these young men are clear and inspiring. He impresses upon them their individual responsibilities to society and the state. While it is a prevailing opinion that men must act in groups and through organization to accomplish anything, he says: "If groups and organizations come into the strong control of the few by reason of the indifference and subservience of the many, the form is retained without the substance and the benefits of co-operation are lost." He also holds up this warning, by none needed more than by young men at the threshold of their active careers: "Men whom no wealth could bribe fail in public life victims to a chivalrous regard for those who have helped them to climb to public places. This is because of a strange inversion of values. The supposed private debt is counted more important than the public duty."—Boston Transcript.

JINGLES AND JESTS

Happy Days.

Good news to little children—
The wintertime is near,
The frost is on the pumpkin,
The children's on the eary,
The wheat has long been garnered,
Long faded is the rose,
And while the candle it smokes, it blows,
The world it blows its nose.Good news to little children—
It's time for rubber boots
And worsted mitts and ear-taps
And woolen union suits,
The snow gets in your boot tops
And snowballs black your eyes,
So, hip, hurrah, my children!
The wintertime is night! —Judge.

Golden Silence.

"Simplicity," he said, just for the purpose of breaking the long silence, "is the surest sign of greatness."
"Dear me, what an egotist you are!" she pleasantly replied.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Jack—Broken yourself of the habit?
Bill—No; quit going!—Leslie's Weekly.

Knew His Zoology.

"Little boy," asks the well meaning reformer, "is that your mamma over yonder with the beautiful set of furs?"
"Yes, sir," answers the bright lad.
"Well, do you know what poor animal it is that has had to suffer in order that your mamma might have the furs with which she adorns herself so proudly?"
"Yes, sir. My papa."—Chicago Evening Post.

Song of an Old Bachelor.

Oh, tender lovely woman is,
A thing of down and satin;
Some spot of deathless roses she
Should make her habitat in;
How carefully she wraps her up
When winter swirls and rangles;
A seal-skin sack upon her back
And gauze upon her ankles.Oh, graciously lovely woman is,
In bluish the balm, she;
The ministering angel here,
Man's stay in storm and calm, she,
She smooths our brow, she buoys us up
Through fate's outrageous twisters—
And with fair lips she soundly rips
Her luckless errand sisters!Oh, fragile lovely woman is!
Behold the "weaker vessel."
Unfitted by her feeble frame,
With stress and ruth to wrestle,
Not hers to walk, not hers to work,
With ease her path we hem, sir—
So that she may but shop all day
And "bridge" till 4 a. m., sir!Oh, darling lovely woman is,
The time about the oak, she;
Our ever present joy and light,
Our ever present joke, she;
Without her life would be but gray
And we but dull, sad foxes;
'Tis she supplies us paradise—
And squalid parodies! —Kansas City Journal.

TWO BOOKS OF POEMS.

Judge Wendell P. Stafford to Issue One. Other by R. D. Brodie, Stone Cutter.

A volume of poems by Justice Wendell P. Stafford of the supreme court of the District of Columbia is to be published soon, under the title, "Dorian Days." This title is chosen because the beauty of ancient Greece is in great measure the inspiration of the volume.

"Changing Voices and Other Poems" is the title of a small volume just issued from The Gotham Press of Boston, by R. D. Brodie. The volume contains some over a score of poems and songs, many of them of a religious nature. Mr. Brodie, who is a paving stone cutter by trade, shows much ability in the work here presented, and it is well worth reading, as this first stanza from the first poem in the book, "Changing Voices," will indicate:

"No many voices fill the earth around,
No human ear can gather all the tones;
But some one voice predominant is heard,
As when the swelling notes of some sweet bird
Overwhelm all nature's quieter tints
And make that spot for us enchanted ground,
That 'neath their spell we hear that voice alone,
And silent others seem till that is gone."
